An embassy is an office representing a foreign country in a host country. The former American Embassy in The Hague is a national monument.

The former American Embassy in The Hague is a national monument. It was designed in 1956 by architect Marcel Breuer and was controversial from the start. We invite you to get to know the building in a fun way and learn about its history. You can do puzzles and create your own ideal country - your utopia, where everything is perfect. What does your ideal country look like? How is it organised? What does its map look like? We'll have all the materials ready. Come along and create your own imaginary country! The little ones make their own passports and can dream about travelling to different destinations. When you're done making your ideal country or passport, then the WEST team has a fun surprise for you!
